Yaacov Ro'i is professor of history at Tel Aviv University and senior research fellow there at the Cummings Center for Russian and East European Studies. He has published a number of works on Soviet Central Asia and Islam, including two edited volumes – The USSR and the Muslim World (George Allen & Unwin, 1984); and Muslim Eurasia: Conflicting Legacies (Frank Cass, 1995) – and one monograph, Islam in the Soviet Union from the Second World War to Gorbachev (Christopher Hurst and Columbia University Press, 2000).

Central Asian and Caucasian Prospects (CACP)

Established to promote research on the 'new' states of Central Asia and the Caucasus, the Central Asian and Caucasian Prospects project of the RIIA (previously the Former Soviet South project) provides a forum for the dissemination of ideas and information on the domestic and international developments shaping the policies of these countries. The project also supports publication of CACP Key Papers.

Recent Key Papers

Shirin Akiner Tajikistan: Disintegration or Reconciliation?

This paper analyses the internal and external dynamics of the Tajik conflict, assessing the relative weight of political, ideological, ethnic and regional factors. It also considers the impact of developments in Tajikistan for the wider Central Asian region and the prospects for a lasting peace and economic recovery.

Bruno Coppieters Federalism and Conflict in the Caucasus

This study examines the relevance of federalism to the circumstances of conflict in the South Caucasus. It considers difficulties in implementing federative structures in the region and the consequences for political negotiations. It also examines existing political models in other states to illustrate principles and techniques of federalism and consider their application to the South Caucasus.

Sally Cummings Kazakhstan: Centre-Periphery Relations

An analysis of the dynamics between Kazakhstan's centralizing policies and mounting economic and political centrifugal forces in a country eleven times the size of the United Kingdom, with over one hundred national minorities. The political stakes are further raised by the republic's vast potential mineral wealth and geostrategic importance, situated as it is between Russia, China and the Middle East.

Gareth Winrow Turkey and the Caucasus: Domestic Interests and Security Concerns

The author provides an overview of Turkey's relations with its Caucasian neighbours and discusses their future development. He analyses the role of official and non-official actors in formulating foreign policy, the complications of wider regional dynamics and the geopolitical and economic significance of Turkey as a regional power and NATO member state, and as a market and transit route for Caspian resources.
