Martha Brill Olcott chronicles the pageant of Kazakh history as it marches across the vast steppes of Central Asia. She details the major events that have shaped the character of this Islamic nation of Turkic speaking people, which exists as a cultural and ethnic minority within the political boundaries of the Soviet Union.

The Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic encompasses an area of more than one million square miles, shares a long and strategic border with China, is larger than Western Europe, and has a population that is the fourth largest in the Soviet Union. Professor Olcott highlights the critical economic and political problems that confront the seven million people of the Kazakh nation.

"Her work demonstrates an intimate knowledge of Kazakh history and the contemporary scene. There are other books on Kazakh history and Kazakhstan, but none of the same magnitude and scholarly quality as Professor Olcott's." (Wayne S. Vucinich, Professor Emeritus, History Department, Stanford University)
