Acknowledgments

The editors would like to acknowledge considerable help from Kay Marles and Jackie Jones, who consulted and contributed throughout the later stages of the book; also from Stuart Ridsdale, who provided the account of the Karakoram Highway and other North–West expeditions; Sally Thompson, for her last minute updating work; and, lastly, Danell Jones for some extremely useful background pieces.

Catharine Sanders: In China, thanks to Zi Han, professor at Shanghai's Jiaotong University, who introduced me to his native town of Shaoxing; to Colin, who taught me to ride pillion on his bicycle through Zhenjiang; to Bing Lin from Linxian, my travelling companion from Wuhan to Anyang; and to Liu Jiancheng of Xi'an. At home, thanks to Craig Clunas and others for reading chapters in their early stages and especially Kate Boyes for her suggestions, corrections and memories of Huangshan.

Chris Stewart: Special thanks to Chen Huiqing of Hohhot and to Wang Xiaoxing of Harbin.

Rhonda Evans: For her contribution to the Fuzhou section, Tsai Chu Wai.

The rough guide to

CHINA

CHINA has been open to independent travellers since 1981, when the first individual visas began to be issued in Hong Kong. Since then, scarcely a month has gone by without the authorities opening up five or six 'new' destinations. Today, on a general entry visa, you can visit over two hundred Chinese cities, towns and attractions.

THE ROUGH GUIDE TO CHINA is the most complete, and the most practical, handbook available. Many aspects of getting about China – even things like buying a bus ticket, or finding a cheap place to eat – are still far from simple. This guide makes them a lot more straightforward and will save you both time and money as well as pointing towards the most interesting possibilities of Chinese travel. Not just in cities and sights – although here the ROUGH GUIDE provides an unusually full cultural insight – but in the facts and shaping influences of modern Chinese life.
