Southwestern Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region

In Chinese pīnyīn, the name of the whole region is Xīnjiāng Wéiwú'ěr Zìzhìqū. Uyghurs prefer to call their homeland East Turkestan or Uyguristan. If both Uyghur and Chinese names of cities and towns are known, the Uyghur is used throughout and the Chinese is given in parentheses at the first use. Most maps of the region are an inexplicable mixture of Uyghur, Chinese, and Anglicized names. Xīnjiāng means "new frontier."

May 2011

An environmental crisis in the largely desolate Xinjiang region of the People's Republic of China re-ignites the centuries-old conflict between the native Uygurs and their recurrent Chinese masters. The escalating disaster draws in criminals, opportunistic politicians, terrorists, and military forces. A Uygur doctor and Chinese colleague defy Beijing and enter the affected region. A Chinese-American doctor, Dr Robert Jiang, with the aid of an American special operations team, infiltrates Xinjiang to rescue his Uygur and Chinese friends from gangsters, Muslim radicals, and Special Forces of the People's Armed Police. Together with another "hybrid," a resolute young Uygur-Chinese woman, Robert uses a rare Chinese-Muslim martial art (xīn yì liù hé quán) in confrontations with their enemies. The information they attempt to bring out of Xinjiang could jeopardize the Communist Party's long subjugation of the region and eventually its control over the whole of China.
